FURTHER OBSERVATIONS ON THE ANIMAL HEALTH TRUST (AHT), NEWMARKET

1. My recollection is that the site remained a single entity and not several sites, side by side, although there were different departments, such as virology, pathology etc. There was a free movement of staff between departments and clinical units.
2. Initially the primary activity of the site was research and development with a small amount of clinical work. As time went by, the clinical work assumed a greater proportion of the whole. Nevertheless, the AHT remained a centre of excellence for research and development.
3. Animals referred to the AHT were accompanied by the owner, rather than the referring veterinary surgeon. This is typical for a referral institute.
4. The diagnostic testing service was an important part of the activity of the AHT. They supplied results to both referring veterinary surgeons and external bodies, such as the Horseracing Authority or equine groups, such as the FEI. Funds from both the testing service and clinical referral service were, to the best of my knowledge, reinvested in research and development.
